

⚡Welcome to the top of my head

The creative process on this one started around the idea of comic strips, where people's thoughts are portrayed as floating in clouds connected to the thinker with a series of puffs resembling bubbles.

So I got to thinking about a photo-realistic version of this concept, and came up with actual bubbles coming out of a real head via the magic of Photoshop.

It seemed to me that the thinker should always be below the bubbles, and the solution I liked best was fixed positioning.

Following on with the comic strip idea, I thought about how it is not only words that are used in the balloons, but also symbols such as light bulbs or lightning bolts.

So at the beginning of the header for each post, you can place an icon signifying your mood. They are placed through a combination of CSS and custom fields that change the h2 class depending on what you type into the "mood" field for the

about archive contact feed

off the top of my head

aboutarchivecontactfeed